Inner Work and Outer Action

March 24, 2009

GROUP WISDOM & INSIGHTS

Supportive Community

Commitment and support of the community!

A willingness to listen to each other.

Genuine care and concern amongst everyone present.

We are sitting with an amazing group of people already dedicated to positive community action.

Tools for Change

Our language creates our reality. ... How do we evolve our language to reflect our changing reality?

Simplify to get ahead

Can we rely on old tools to distribute resources, etc?

The importance of balancing inner and outer work. Be aware of your need to balance to be able to act.

Basic human needs being met is step 1.

balance acceptance change surrender intention

Getting away from right/, us/them, and black/white thinking. Moving to "both/and".

Fear, love, hope, and intention are sources/catalysts for acceptance, presence, and change

Intention/Commitment

Commitment to inner work/transformation is a direct reflection to what we see in the outer world.

Commitment and support of the community!

Common sense and purpose of a collective force.

We create our reality.

Creating a Container for the Process

Rites of passage: Going through a special container to become a leader. What if our political leaders had to do this rite of passage to be allowed to lead?

There are stages in the transformative process. You can identify where you are and rest assured you are on the path, and you can get help moving through the specific stages.

Important to know what the essential elements of a container (space for movement) are that can create opportunities for personal transformation?

Questions

What is the true currency of our experience? How does this work relate to $$$?

Is the greatest challenge an impetus for the greatest growth?

Does humanity require divine unity to reach its ultimate potential?

We are all connected. How do we put it in action?...and do it together?

What are we sourcing from in creating change and where are we headed? Fear vs Love
